I have had the experience of being in an elevator car with a female who had just had a baby. Her entire body was a mess. She had a big belly and her breasts were heavy. She was probably just pushing down on the elevator buttons because she wanted to hide her breasts. By virtue of it being a traffic free environment, you will inevitably have a lot of people walking by every day. But you won't want to suffer the embarrassment of having that much time alone with your girlfriends. Luckily there are some practical solutions to this problem, allowing you to have the companionship you need and at the same time minimize the awkwardness. The first and most obvious solution is to form some kind of a

I want to use the Facebook PHP SDK, but can't get an example to work. I downloaded the latest Facebook SDK from and then added it to my composer.json file like so: "require": { "facebook/php-sdk-v4": "2.0" }, then ran composer update. Now, I want to make a simple facebook log in form for one of my sites. So I go to the facebook-php-sdk-v4 directory and try to run this in the shell: php testfb_login_helper.php But it doesn't work (I'm getting some undefined function errors): PHP Fatal error: Uncaught Exception: Undefined function: FacebookHttpClient: replaceAppId in..... Where should I put the FacebookHttpClient class that's used in the example testfb_login_helper.php file? And what is that class exactly, and how should I use it? A: First of all, the Facebook SDK is for running Graph API operations on a server side. If you want to use it with a PHP client app, this file is probably not useful to you. If you just want to login to Facebook with PHP, try this: $facebook = new Facebook(['appId' => 'YOUR_APP_ID', 'secret' => 'YOUR_APP_SECRET', 'cookie' => false,]); $loginUrl = $facebook->getLoginUrl(); $user = $facebook->getUser(); Linux for Android mobile devices via a custom recovery - and to use its own services with Android
